Extract from Prayer to the Holy Cross The Prayers and Meditations of Saint Anselm

With what love shall I glory in you, O Cross, when without you there would be nothing for me to glory in, and in eternity I should have the grief and misery of hell.
With what delight will I rejoice in you, when by you the servitude of hell which I inherited is exchanged for the kingdom of heaven.
With what jubilation will I laud you, when without you I faced that future which horrifies me, even if it had lasted only a moment, and through you I now expect to rejoice in eternity.
Though now I serve God between hope and fear, I am sure that if I give thanks, love, and live in your glory, through you I shall at last come to that good.

So let my glory be through you and in you; let my true hope be through you and in you.
By you my sins are wiped out, by you my soul is dead to its old life and lives to the new life of righteousness.
I beseech you, wash me by baptism from the sins in which I was conceived and born, and cleanse me again from those that I committed after I was reborn, so that by you I may come to those good things for which man was created, by the might of the same Jesus Christ our Lord who is blessed for ever and ever. Amen.
